Here, we will tour the town's streets (during the dry season) or waterways (during the rainy season). As water laps the verandas during the rainy season, the homes appear to be floating. However, during the dry season, towering stilts are visible, making the homes appear like wooden skyscrapers.

Then, we will examine the wall murals in one of the pagodas constructed on the site of an old temple. In order to have a better understanding of rural life, we can also make a stop to see a residence there.

We take a boat into the vast lake's open water to see a small floating community and learn more about this amazing natural flood barrier.

You will then return to your accommodation in Siem Reap and have the time on your own for the rest of the day.
